

found Dolmen

10.174

Good water at trough - at homestead

now by B.J. Murphy, Paisley

Saturday, 20 June 1987, Silver Lake - first visit to dolmen site - good lineup w/ eastern hills, ~~sun~~ line-up rock to dolmen. lots > rock writings — may more than described by Roy Phillips. If we are camped w/ Roy & his wife Louise on the old lake shore, can see the water, the marsh from here. Beautiful site despite the red ants & the mosquitoes.

A lots > chippings at dolmen. Pot diggers have been everywhere. A hole under every rock, particularly if that rock happens to have a RW on it.

10,175

more pw below & all) sites below & above) sites maps) dolmen hill (approx)

wall stumps

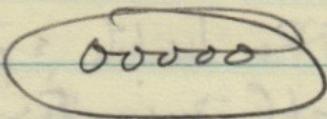

Reed
top of rock w/
new w/p
old line - up's set in old 5" w/p
rock
1" w/p
rock
& 3" w/p
tree

- 1 dolmen w/ RW
- 2 rock w/ ridge
- 3 smooth top rock
- 4 " " "
- 5 propped rock w/ V-cut
- 6 RW rock
- 7 large rock
- 8 stone circle
- 9 water catching rock
- 10 locator RW for water catching rock
- 11 mortar
- 12 pointed rock
- 13 smooth top rock

10, 176

Sunset; sun lines up w/ dolmen, rock 13 goes down thru notch - 2 Juniper trees may have prevented sun daggles across sun symbol rock (#6) - Rune was a ~~short~~ short dagger 15-30 min. before sunset

Monday, 22 June 1987, Ashlar -

It has occurred to me, especially lately, that my work has thrust me into situations bordering on the bizarre & unexplainable. Coming back from these days in the desert where existence is defined neither as ~~sane~~ sane or crazy (there seems little difference between the 2) I find myself -as usual-questioning my place in the society of Ashlar (the middle) nowhere as opposed to the middle, somewhere such as the dolmen). Don't talk about the lights on Table Rock, Chuck once told the & I, or people will call you crazy & someday they'll lock you up in the looney bin.

10, 177

Sleeping sat night by the dry creek below the dolmen on the shore of the marsh at Sister Lake. Sometimes around 12:30 am, as the stars flashed on & off & of the fog drifting thru the bushes over the marsh, someone walked along the road carrying a flashlight, the beam swinging w/each step. But the light suddenly disappeared. Twenty minutes later, the same thing, only the light was dimmer. Flashing my own light out > the fact, there was no one there.

There wasn't my imagination working over time. Michelle saw her, too. Next morning, Roy told us about a dream he had: The old woman at the ranch house (nearly 2 mi away) walking her dog along the road in the middle of the night. Roy hadn't seen the lights.

All this to the chans, coyotes howling along the mesas, then yapping & yipping nearly out of control, under a sky moonless until 2 am or so.

Next morning at the dolmen, too many clouds to get any sense of alignment,

10, 17⁸

ough Re dolor itself (if the hole underneath is perfectly exposed) to Re in my sun on Re solstice. Re sun didn't break thru Re clouds until too late.
Obvious but something happens Re sun, though, but it may take several visits to figure it out, & later

Silver lake dolmen letter to Roy Phillips dated 27 June 1987. I call MOSQUITOES AND ANTS AND SWINGING LIGHTS & Dear Roy, & so here's the solstice weekend story.

We made it to the dolmen all right (your directions were superb), even talked to Fernette McDowell at the second ranch. With her permission we camped at the second creek crossing, in the shadow of the hill where the dolmen sits, amid mosquitoes and red ant hills. That evening we checked the site for a sunset alignment. Though a couple of juniper trees got in the way, there was a perfect alignment with a smooth-topped rock and the sun going down in a distant canyon when viewed from the dolmen. There was somewhat of a sun dagger across the sun symbol on the rock in front of the dolmen, but that was partially obscured by the two trees. In addition to the rocks you mentioned to me, there are others which seem to have something to do with the site - all of them rubbed smooth on top, and also a few other rock writings scattered over the area as well as a rock wall and steps just below the ridge, and a large mortar rock near the center of the hill, not to mention acres of obsidian chippings. It Saturday night was strange. Though the moon was somewhat nonexistent and the marsh at Silver lake, just a stone's throw away, was obscured by mist moving through the basin, it never seemed to get quite dark. In the middle of the night, odd lights appeared near our camp and seemed to move down the road, then out into the marsh, almost like people carrying flashlights, the beams swinging back and forth with every step. Coyotes yipped and yapped up this canyon, down that canyon, and the mist swirled like dry ice. It Next morning, unfortunately, there were plenty of clouds. We didn't see the sun till half an hour after sunrise so we're uncertain about any alignments. One thing for sure, though, the one rock directly behind the dolmen doesn't line up at sunrise, though others may. The dolmen itself, however, is perfectly squared to the solstice sunrise, as are the supporting rocks underneath. Looks like a few more trips to unravel this mystery, despite the mosquitoes and the ants and the swinging lights. It No clue as to a translation of the rock writings yet, except for the obvious: something happens with the sun at this place. And the open eyes. Roy Scarbrough should have shot some decent photos. We'll see what those turn up. It Warm regards, Tom

It Some additional notes on the Silver lake dolmen. It On 20-21 of June 1987, Michele, Irina and I were camped at the dolmen with Roy Scarbrough and Louis Goldberg. On Saturday night I noticed the swinging lights not 30 feet from our tent. I woke Michele and we watched them for a long while. They seemed to go past every 20 minutes. They weren't marsh lights nor car headlights from the highway across the marsh. They were something else. A couple of times I flashed my light at them when they were close but we could see nothing there. Next morning we told the story to Irving, Roy and Louie - nobody else had seen them - and Louie said she had a dream that night that Fernette McDonald (the lady at the ranch) had taken her dogs for a walk down the road in the middle of the night and walked by our camp carrying a lantern. Sometime later, Greg Leiber and I visited the dolmen to photograph it but were unable to sleep there because there were too many mosquitoes. We took a room at the motel at Silver Lake. I've been back a few times since.